I have no deep knowledge of Japan or its culture, but there is a fairly substantial amount of blogging and other online reports done by US visitors and residents in Japan which detail the distinctive and more sensational aspects of the society, from pop culture such as TV gameshows to cuisine. Some feminist ethnographers have detailed the constraints on and contradictions of Japanese womanhood. [provide cite] [give simple examples ?—e.g. extreme expectation that mothers make elaborate and original bento boxes for the school lunch; "normal" expectation that men will/may grope teen girls on the subway] It doesn't take much internet searching to find bizarre, and disgusting, Japanese activities (such as: videos of boys sneaking up on girls in public and pulling down their underpants; voyeuristic photos and videos of young girls displaying their crotch area in bathing suits or showing off their underpants; various "lolicon" hentai, manga and anime, etc.)
